Germany cannot, however, forbear to point out that all its efforts in this direction may be rendered vary difficult by two circumstances: First, the misuse of neutral flags by British merchant vessels, which is indubitably known to the United States; second, the contraband trade already mentioned, especially in war materials, on neutral vessels.

"Germany is ready, finally, to deing to the spirit of real neutrality regarding the first point. The seoret order of the British Admiralty, recommending to British merchaut been communicated by Germany to the United States and confirmed by communication with the British Foreign Office, which designates this procedure as entirely unobjectionable and in accordance with British law.

British merchant shipping immediately followed this advice, as doubtjess is known to the American Government from the incidents of the

"Moreover, the British Government has supplied arms to British merchant ships and instructed them forcibly to resist German submarines. In these circumstances it would be very

President Wilson views the international situation with optimism, it
